Stanford Professor Dr. Robert Sapolsky is a biologist, neuroendocrinologist and stress expert. He has written books such as stress and the brain, the biology of our individuality, and the evolution of men. His unique perspective on the condition comes from his work in the field and the laboratory as a neuroscientist. He has written books like Why Zebras Don't Get Ulcers (1984), A Primate's Memoir (2002) and Stress: The Biology of Humans at Our Best and Worst (2017).
